“ I did not know Dreatha long, but feel very blessed to have known her as long as I did. We met waiting for radiation. I noticed how she always had her makeup just right and always smiling. Honestly smiling in that situation says a lot. I soon found out we were fighting the same cancer. Dreatha always had such a good attitude and always said she was going to beat this. I was always so glad to run into her at the doctor or waiting for tests. She became a very dear friend and "sister" in this fight we shared. I will miss her. One thing she always said is that one day we would beat this cancer and we would get together and just talk about our families. I just know when I lose my battle that she and I will meet in heaven and finally talk about things other than cancer. I will keep your family in my prayers as I always did her. She loved her family very much and fought this battle hard wanting to be with you guys!
