“ It was only one day last week that I bumped into MB at the feed store. I had not seen him in probably fifty years.(We rode the school bus together a few times.) I was searching for a particular item. The clerk was a little unsure about what I needed. This man, who introduced himself as MB Graham, spoke up and described what I needed. Then he said he had one he would just give me. I offered to pay him, but he refused, saying that he got it for free. He took my name and number and said that he would leave it at the feed store the next time he drove that way. As I left the feed store, I really thought that there was little chance that he would remember his promise to me. Well, he called just a day or two later, telling me that he was leaving it at the feed store. It is not about the monetary value of the item, which was not much. It was and is about a man keeping his promise on a little thing.. A promise made to someone he did not know. I will always remember him for that one thing - keeping a promise. The family has my condolences.
